The Southern Warrior Held in $1,000 for Examination.

Mrs. Torres Trusted Him with Her Rent and He Pocketed It.

Col. William C. Corrier was held in position for a Southern gentleman and Colonel in the Confederate Army, but pretext of giving them employment, unless Mrs. Dora Torres, of 54 West

Mrs. Torres recently moved into the Twenty-eighth street house and began taking in boarders. Among her early strons was Col. Corrier, and it was he that helped Mrs. Torres along in prering her house to entertain the large and fashionable patronage he was sure

His advice was so aptly given in all His advice was so aptly given in all particulars and proved of such good judgment whenever acted upon, that Mrs. Torres soon grew to rely largely upon his masterful opinions.

He is six feet tail and as straight as a lickory tree. He has a handsome, rugged face, lighted with an eye that beams with sympathy and again flashes with the fire of a hawk's, rie wears his gray hair in clustering curls, and his white mustache droops, when the wind is asleep, far down upon his broad othest

chest
That is the kind of a man that Mrs.
Torres trusted last Saturday with a check for $139.66 to go to her landlord check for $139.66 to go to her landlord and pay $135 rent.

The Colonel accepted the commission and returned in a little while with $14.66 and a receipt for $125, which appeared to be signed by Agent Goodale, who rents to Mrs. Torres. If it had not been for a sudden request from Agent Goodale for the remittance of $125, Mrs. Torres might not have discovered for some time that the money never reached the agent, as now seems to be the case.

Col. Corrier was gone from the house over Sunday, but returned yesterday and submitted to Mrs. Torres a large scheme whereby for $500 remitted through him, as she says, she might secure an extended lease of the property.

Mrs. Torres pretended to acquiesce, excused herself from the room and called Detective Jerolamon, who arrested Col. Corrier.

The detective says that the Colonel admitted that the $125$ had not reached the agent, but that he had borrowed it temporarily and would repay. Nevertheless the prosecution is kept up.

For some time since the war and until recently the Colonel has been living at Rutherford. N. J. There he has developed and had patented a heating appliance that renders the most satisfactory service at a great economy of tuel. He has been promoting this invention in the city of late.

In court this morning Reinhaltbolz said that he was in doubt whether the defendant had robbed him. Policeman Smith found a loaded revolver on the prisoner and, on that charge, he was held. He was discharged on the charge of robbery.
